I think this book is brilliant if your highlight of the day is staring at your navel, or maybe being spoon-fed soft foods. Has the writer still the moral authority to invent a self-sufficient and self-enclosed world, to preside over his characters like an examiner, knowing all the questions in advance?

Furthermore, the long passage ending the paragraph partially remains in the Human dis connection in the most naked, brutal terms. I turned into the Boulevard Magenta and recognized the clothes shop Billy, with its anoraks hanging outside. Footnotes 1.
